Highlights

- The bill's provisions with regard to victim restitution and the membership of certain state operations have no readily apparent direct fiscal effects on the state or political subdivisions.

Detailed Analysis

Victim restitution

The bill includes, for the purposes of calculating restitution, the cost of accounting or auditing done to determine the extent of economic loss as a type of economic loss. Under continuing law, a sentencing court may impose financial sanctions on a criminal offender or delinquent child, including ordering the offender or delinquent child to make restitution to the victim of the offense or delinquent act in an amount based on the economic loss suffered by the victim as determined by the court. The sentencing court is required or permitted to consider specified information in determining the restitution to be made and the means for the execution of restitution orders.

With the bill, the court is permitted to take into consideration the accounting or auditing costs a victim has incurred when determining restitution. Restitution is limited to the value of property or services stolen or damaged as result of an offense. There is not expected to be additional administrative costs associated with processing or enforcing the collection of payments as offenders may already be ordered to pay restitution; instead, the expanded definition of economic loss may increase the amount of restitution to be made.

Joint Legislative Ethics Committee

The bill specifies that during the current General Assembly, if a member of the Joint Legislative Ethics Committee (JLEC) is or has been charged with or indicted for certain offenses, that member's seat on the Committee is deemed vacant. This provision has no direct fiscal effect on the state or political subdivisions.

Capitol Square Review and Advisory Board

The bill's changes to the requirements that apply concerning membership on the Capitol Square Review and Advisory Board (CSRAB) have no direct fiscal on the state or political subdivisions.

Emergency clause

The bill declares an emergency, meaning that it takes effect immediately.
