DETAILED ANALYSIS

Aggravated murder

Peace officers and prosecutors

The bill modifies the class of victims for aggravated murder to include peace officers and prosecutors. Under the bill, the offense of "aggravated murder" prohibits a person from purposely causing the death of a "peace officer" or "prosecutor" whom the offender knows or has reasonable cause to know is a peace officer or prosecutor when either of the following applies: (1) the peace officer or prosecutor, at the time of the commission of the offense, was engaged in the peace officer's or prosecutor's duties, or (2) the offender's specific purpose is to kill a peace officer or prosecutor. Under current law, the offense applies to a “law enforcement officer.”¹

First responders and military members

The bill retains the class of victims for aggravated murder that includes first responders and military members. Under current law, the offense of “aggravated murder” also prohibits a person from purposely causing the death of a first responder or military member when it is the offender’s specific purpose to kill a first responder or military member.²

Penalty for aggravated murder

Specification of aggravating circumstances

Subject to certain exceptions, the death penalty may be imposed if an indictment or count in an indictment charges the defendant with aggravated murder and contains one or more specifications of aggravating circumstances that is proved beyond a reasonable doubt.³

The bill modifies the class of victims for a specification of aggravating circumstances to include peace officers and prosecutors. Under the bill, the specification applies if the victim of the offense was a peace officer or prosecutor whom the offender had reasonable cause to know or knew to be a law enforcement officer, and either the peace officer or prosecutor, at the time of the commission of the offense, was engaged in the peace officer’s or prosecutor’s duties, or it was the offender’s specific purpose to kill a law enforcement officer. Under current law, the specification applies to a law enforcement officer.⁴

The bill adds a class of victims for a specification of aggravating circumstances to include first responders and military members. Under the bill, the specification applies if the victim of the offense was a first responder or a military member whom the offender had reasonable cause to know or knew to be a first responder or military member, and it was the offender’s specific purpose to kill a first responder or military member.⁵

Death or life imprisonment without parole

If the indictment or count in the indictment charges the defendant with aggravated murder and contains one or more specifications of aggravating circumstances, if the offender is found guilty of both the aggravated murder and one or more of the specifications, and if the victim of aggravated murder was a peace officer, prosecutor, first responder, or military member, the offender must be sentenced to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole or death.⁶

Under continuing law, when the death penalty may be imposed, the court, upon request of the defendant, must require a pre-sentence investigation and mental examination. Copies of any reports must be furnished to the court, jury, prosecutor, and offender. The court and jury must consider any report furnished to it and any evidence raised at trial that is relevant to the aggravating circumstances the offender was found guilty of committing or any factors in mitigation of the imposition of death. The defendant must be given great latitude in the presentation of any factors in mitigation of the imposition of death.⁷

Upon consideration of the relevant evidence raised at trial, the testimony, other evidence, statement of the offender, arguments of counsel, and reports, the court or jury must determine whether the aggravating circumstances the offender was found guilty of committing are sufficient to outweigh the mitigating factors present in the case. If the jury unanimously finds, by proof beyond a reasonable doubt, that the aggravating circumstances the offender was found guilty of committing outweigh the mitigating factors, the jury must recommend to the court that the sentence of death be imposed on the offender.⁸

Absent such a finding, the bill requires that if the victim of aggravated murder was a peace officer, prosecutor, first responder, or military member, the jury must recommend that the offender be sentenced to life imprisonment without parole. Upon a jury's recommendation of life imprisonment without parole, the court must impose the sentence upon the offender.⁹

Exceptions to death or life imprisonment without parole

Definitions

Under the bill, a "peace officer" and a "prosecutor"¹³ are a class of victims for aggravated murder. Under current law, a "law enforcement officer"¹⁴ is a class of victims for aggravated murder. The following table shows the differences between the classes of victims under the bill (peace officer and prosecutor) and under current law (law enforcement officer).

It is important to note that the definition of "law enforcement officer" includes the following "catch-all" provision:

An officer, agent, or employee of the state or any of its agencies, instrumentalities, or political subdivisions, upon whom, by statute, a duty to conserve the peace or to enforce all or certain laws is imposed and the authority to arrest violators is conferred, within the limits of that statutory duty and authority.

This provision likely includes many of the individuals in the table below, without expressly naming those individuals within the statutory definition of "law enforcement officer." Boxes marked with an "X" reflect individuals who are expressly named within the statutory definition of one or more of those three terms. Boxes marked with "Probably" are individuals who likely meet the general catch-all provision within the definition of "law enforcement officer" but who are not expressly named in the statute.
