SUMMARY

- Eliminates the ten-year limitation on utility supply contracts for county buildings.

DETAILED ANALYSIS

County utility supply contracts

The bill repeals the provision of law that limits certain county contracts for the supply of light, heat, or power to county buildings to not more than ten years. Under current law, a board of county commissioners can, at any time before or after a county building is completed, award contracts for supplying the building with light, heat, or power for not more than ten years, with an exception for joint purchasing contracts entered into with another political subdivision. By repealing this limitation, the bill allows for utility supply contracts for county buildings to last indefinitely.¹
