Detailed Fiscal Analysis

School districts

Continuing law requires school districts to establish an extension of their school lunch or school breakfast programs or a summer food service program (SFSP) to provide meals to students participating in summer intervention programs mandated by law. However, continuing law also allows a district to opt out of this food service requirement, if the district determines it cannot comply for financial reasons. The bill requires a district that opts out to permit an alternative summer meal sponsor to use its facilities to provide meals if the facilities are located in an attendance area where at least one-half of students are eligible for free lunches.¹ Although districts will likely incur costs for the use of their facilities, the bill permits the district to offset these costs by charging the summer meal sponsor a reasonable fee. The fee may include the cost of custodial services, charges for the use of school equipment, and a prorated share of utility costs. Under the bill, the summer meal sponsor is also required to indemnify and hold harmless the district from any liability resulting from the operation of a summer meal program.

Ohio Department of Education

The Ohio Department of Education (ODE) administers the SFSP, a nationwide child nutrition program funded by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). Under the SFSP, ODE approves summer meal sponsor applications, conducts trainings for sponsors, monitors SFSP operations throughout the state, and processes reimbursement payments to sponsors based on a set rate per meal served. According to ODE, training for sponsors includes how to plan, operate, budget for, and monitor a food service program. Summer meal sponsors can be public or private nonprofit groups and can include organizations such as government entities, churches, universities, and camps. Under the bill, the State Board of Education must provide a list of approved summer meal sponsors from which school districts can choose.

The administrative burden for ODE may increase to carry out the responsibilities described above if the bill results in an increase in the number of summer meal sponsors or sites. ODE receives federal funds for administrative expenses related to the program. In 2015, the SFSP was offered at 1,550 sites throughout Ohio, which were operated by a total of 135 sponsors. A listing of the state's SFSP sponsors and sites is available online at ODE's website.² In FY 2015, federal reimbursement payments passed through to sponsors amounted to about $11.2 million.
